Despite the economic downturn San Bernardino County's population grew by 24,684 people from 2007 to 2009, according to preliminary estimates from the U.S. Census Bureau.

The county's population was 2,017,673 as of July 1, 2009.

That growth was even more pronounced in the seven years before 2007, according to the Census Bureau.

Almost 300,000 more moved into San Bernardino County since 2000, helping to make the San Bernardino-Riverside counties region one of the fastest growing parts of the country. The region grew by about 900,000 since 2000, according to Census Bureau figures released Tuesday.
